

I am the Dean, School of Nursing, University of Notre Dame Australia. I teach in the undergraduate and postgraduate program in the School as well as supervise higher degree students. I completed my PhD at Curtin University of Technology, WA. My area of expertise is nursing education and qualitative research. I have worked in all areas of nursing and have current nursing experience as a Community Health Nurse. As part of my administrative role I am trialling many innovations in nursing education. Prior to teaching at the University, I was the Nursing Adviser for Professional Standards at the Nurses Board of Western Australia. I have nursing education experience both here and overseas. I am currently a Board Member of the Nurses and Midwives Board of Western Australia and a Governing Council Member of Challenger Institute.
