

Name:

Ranjan

Ray

Introduce yourself in a brief paragraph:

I moved to Australia in July, 1995 from Delhi. I was working in Delhi as Professor of Economics at the Delhi School of Economics. When I migrated to Australia in 1995, I started work as Professor of Economics at the University of Tasmania. I moved to my present position of Professor of Economics at Monash University in early 2008.

Prior to returning to India, I was working as lecturer in Econometrics at Manchester University in the UK. (1979-89)

My research and teaching interests include Development Economics and Public Economics. I retain close links with India, including working with colleagues at several Indian universities. My research involves working on India and using Indian data sets.

I am encouraged by the initiative to foster closer relationship between persons of Indian origin working in Australian universities and their colleagues in India.

I will be very happy to help, if I can.